About the charities...

Halo Children's Foundation

Halo Children's Foundation is a local charity providing support, guidance and hope to children of all ages and their families who are dealing with bereavement after the death of a loved one. For many children this is a parent, but can be a sibling, grandparent or any loved one now missing from their life.

The charity holds expressive arts and play sessions for children, provides personalised memory boxes and forever cushions, offers counselling, a bereavement book library and pays for trips so families can build new memories together.

The charity's hub is based in Uxbridge at the HALO play café, offering a safe place for families to access the support they need, for referrals and most importantly so they do not grieve alone.

Al-Falah Institute

The Al-Falah Institute is an educational and support centre for women, young children and refugees and is dedicated to providing a caring environment for everyone to reach their full potential.

The charity provides guidance, advice, mediation and counselling services for those in need as well as free skills classes including English, maths and IT to empower women to become independent and ready to enter the workforce. The charity's refugee support initiative includes opening a food bank and starting English for Speakers of other Languages classes.

The aim of the charity is to provide practical skills for women so they can contribute positively to their local communities.
